at following code snippet from kotlin: suspend fun T.runtime(): T { val func: () -> T doAsync { try { func() } catch (ex: Throwable) { RuntimeException(ex) } } return func() } here func() is just a callable function. The suspend modifier does not appear to have any impact on this code (as far as I can tell). I can imagine that this should compile to something like suspend fun T.runtime(): T { return doAsync { try { func() } catch (ex: Throwable) { RuntimeException(ex) } }() } But how does it work under the hood? Is this runtime() call some sort of a closure to doAsync, and it is just some special syntax for it (because I haven't found any documentation), or is it something much more complicated? I'm using Kotlin 1.0.
